IMPACT OF INVASIVE SPECIES ON INDIAN ECOSYSTEM

Subham Karmakar, Vijaygarh Jyotish Ray college, Department of Zoology

List of Abundant Invasive Species

- ❖ Cassia sp.
- ❖ Chromolaena sp.
- ❖ Lantana sp.
- ❖ Prosopis sp.
- ❖ Parthenium sp.
- ❖ Cotton Mealy Bug
- ❖ Water Hyacinth

About Invasive species!

Invasive species are non-indigenous species that spread from the point of introduction and become abundant, invasive species can harm both the natural resources and threaten humans. Invasive species are also termed as the "Invasives" species due to their smothering nature towards ecosystems.

Adaptive Ability!

- ❖ Fast growth
- ❖ Rapid Reproduction
- ❖ High dispersal ability
- ❖ Phenotypic plasticity
- ❖ Ecological Competence

Impact On Environment

Lantana sp.

- ❖ Partially affects human and cause gastrointestinal toxicity.
- ❖ Catal conditions are seen in other mammals and birds.
- ❖ Domestically even the growth of native plants.
- ❖ Biodiversity loss.

Parthenium sp.

- ❖ Hemorrhagic disease is caused by parthenium.
- ❖ Dermatitis and respiratory disorders in humans.
- ❖ Astringent growth of native plants by allelopathic effect.
- ❖ Soil erosion.
- ❖ Resource loss.

Control Measures!!

- ❖ Mowing
- ❖ Flooding
- ❖ Proper hand pulling
- ❖ Use of herbicides
- ❖ Take measures while waterlogging lands from different water bodies.
- ❖ Monitoring of Invasive species.

For this thought to be in place, there is a need to increase the level.

Conclusion

Invasive or Alien species are nothing but foreign species in a native environment. Because of their species leads to loss of biodiversity and resources. Due to which an imbalance in the native environment is seen and which can also cause climate change. Impact of all these direct fatal effects are also seen. Thus proper control measures should be taken against these species for the better future of our "Ecosystem".

IMPACT OF INVASIVE SPECIES ON INDIAN ECOSYSTEMS

Manjita Ghosh
Post Graduate Department of Zoology, Dinabandhu Andrews College, University of Calcutta, Garia, Kolkata - 700084, West Bengal, India

WHAT IS INVASIVE SPECIES?

Invasive species are non-indigenous species, alien species, or exotic species, not native species that significantly modify or damage the ecosystem it colonizes. The majority of invasive species are alien, but it is important to note that native species may also become invasive, usually under altered environmental conditions such as grazing, erosion, changes in nutrient regimes, colonization by an invasive species, or other alterations. Invasive species increase biodiversity and ecosystem processes, with direct and indirect impacts on human well-being. They respond to both biodiversity and climate local adaptation. They also modify habitat. They often introduce directly by expanding species that already depend on it, e.g., non-native lower plants, 2017, and by establishing on ground and extending land agriculture and grazing land. They often introduce and modify indirectly by altering biological interactions, such as the productivity of ecosystem services, and due to their control or management.

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN ALIEN, INVASIVE AND INVASIVE ALIEN SPECIES

Alien Species	Invasive Species	Invasive Alien Species
• A species that has been introduced to an area outside its native range, where it does not occur naturally.	• A species that has established and spread in an area outside its native range, where it does not occur naturally, and which has the potential to cause harm to the environment, economy, or human health.	• An alien species that has established and spread in an area outside its native range, where it does not occur naturally, and which has the potential to cause harm to the environment, economy, or human health.

HOW ALIEN SPECIES ARE INTRODUCED?

Alien species introduction can occur through various means:

- Intentional introduction (e.g., for agriculture, horticulture, or wildlife management)
- Accidental introduction (e.g., via shipping, trade, or travel)
- Self-introduction (e.g., via natural dispersal)

HOW TO IDENTIFY IF A SPECIES IS INVASIVE OR NOT?

Key indicators for identifying an invasive species include:

- Origin: Is the species native to the area?
- Spread: Is the species spreading rapidly?
- Impact: Is the species causing harm to the environment, economy, or human health?
- Control: Is the species difficult to control?

MANAGING INVASIVE SPECIES

Effective management of invasive species requires a combination of prevention, control, and eradication. Key strategies include:

- Prevention: Reducing the risk of new introductions.
- Control: Managing established populations.
- Eradication: Removing the species from the area.
